Estimate in chat: Would you expect more often from faculty, more often from students, or about the same?

SERU 2021

Summary of Observations:

- Response patterns to many items remained stable even under pandemic conditions, especially in items that address engagement with faculty
- Response to overall satisfaction items changed noticeably under pandemic conditions -- but in most cases UI students responded to those items more positively than students at peer institutions
- Preliminary review shows that response patterns for different segments of the student population vary for some items, but not for all items

Preview of the April SST Meeting

DEI-related items in today's slides are taken from the SERU Core Survey, which goes to students at all SERU institutions.

We use the UI institution-specific section of the survey to ask a number of additional questions on the climate for DEI.

More extensive analysis of responses to SERU DEI items, including the institution-specific items, will be presented at next month's SST meeting.

What next?

Questions for the university to examine further based on SERU 2021 responses:

- How should the university think about response patterns that remained relatively stable even under pandemic conditions?
- Where response patterns changed, will future patterns show that 2021 changes were an exception, or the beginning of a trend?
- What additional work does the university need to do in order to better understand and address different response patterns for different segments of the student population?

experience survey.

SERU and gradSERU 2022 will open on March 29, with weekly reminders on Tuesdays. You can encourage students to take the survey by directing them to <https://seru.uiowa.edu/tell-us>
